

TEPSA NEWSLETTER

AUGUST 2011

Editorial:

J.P. Jacqué

Since this newsletter is published after the summer break, I seize the opportunity to wish you all a good return back to work - despite a difficult climate in the Union. Our Polish Pre-Presidency Conference of last 30 June and 1 July 2011 in the Natolin campus, generously hosted by Paul Demaret and in close cooperation with the European Institute in Lodz, has indeed showed that the economic problems of the Union were far from being solved and that the new institutional architecture has not yet enabled Europe to speak with one voice. We will see whether the request of the Heads of State and Government of the eurozone to President Herman Van Rompuy will bring innovative new initiatives. Also in the field of external relations, the slow implementation of the European External Action Service (EEAS) has not yet fully achieved its objectives. The practice of the coming months will demonstrate whether this is only due to a matter of time or if the system itself is structurally dysfunctional. The Polish Presidency has an important task ahead, particularly with the preliminary discussions on the Multiannual Financial Framework (MFF). However, it is precisely the role of TEPSA and the tasks of its members to continue the reflections on the evolution of the Union and to voice possible responses to these challenges. I am convinced that we will even collaborate more actively within the upcoming months in order to achieve these goals. In this context, I would like to draw the attention to all TEPSA members to the importance to promptly communicate their interests and ideas concerning our next annual programme and their insights for collaboration in 2012. The past experiences have shown how fruitful the collaboration between TEPSA members and between TEPSA and its members has been. In these challenging times, this is more necessary than ever.

Introduction of a Member Institute: European Institute in Łódź

The European Institute in Łódź was established as a non-profit Foundation in 1993. Eighteen years is a long time for an institution which - because of its statutory objectives - could be established only in the 3rd Republic of Poland, when the country regained its full sovereignty and an opportunity emerged to open it up to the unifying Europe. The Institute's history is thus linked to Poland's opening up and getting closer to European structures and its creation was aimed at supporting the process by delivering statutory tasks, such as: research, training, education, publications, dissemination of information and promotion of European ideas. Objectives identified for the Institute by its founders were positively recognized by Łódź city authorities, which translated into a decision to make available for the Institute first the former villa of Robert Schweikert, the present seat of the Institute, and then the former seat of Regional Board of Solidarity Trade Union of the Łódź Region, currently the Alcide de Gasperi Training and Conference Centre (258/260, Piotrkowska Str.).

After the recent death of the Director General Dr Kazimierz Sobotka, the Board functions are played by two Deputy Directors: Anna Jędrzejewska and Edward Sierański.

The European Institute became the first institution dealing with EU issues in Central and Eastern European Countries. Its original characteristic is a multi-dimension and multidisciplinary research, teaching, publishing (over 100 volumes within 4 series of books, studies, manuals and readings), networking, training and dissemination. The first years of Institute's research were devoted mainly to: the concept of Poland's participation in European integration (in terms of economy, law, culture, institutional and social aspects); comparative analysis of earlier enlargements and integration experiences of member states (especially in areas like: institutional aspects of European issues in domestic systems of public governance, economic effects of the membership, implementation of Community law into member states legislation, social communication on integration issues and social costs of adjustments to acquis communautaire); reflection on the future shape of the EU; the future place of the EU in the global system; the role of citizens in integration processes; evaluation of needs in training human resources for the accession and future membership, etc. Based on its own research, between 1993 and 2004 the Institute delivered expert opinions for the Polish government and for the parliament. Amongst the particularly important and key works resulting from research conducted by the Institute and cooperating experts were: the effects of Customs Union and those of including Poland into the EU Single Market; the European concepts of security - the Mediterranean and Baltic perspectives; Social communication and information on European issues in Poland; the methodology of transposing Community law to national legislation in the framework of the Single Market; the economy and security as key elements of the EU enlargement in Central and Eastern Europe; the role of universities and human resources in the process of European integration; Academic education in the field of European integration; Consequences of Poland's membership in WTO in the context of future membership of Poland in the EU. On top of that, together with other centres, the Institute was active in shaping and developing the Polish "White Paper: Poland - European Union". This document comprised the cost and benefit analysis in the context of Poland's membership in the EU in three dimensions, i.e. economy, law and science and technology. In 1995 the Institute contributed to a study made for the European Parliament delivering an analysis of preparations of Central and East European Countries for EU membership. At the same time, along with foreign partners from TEPSA we started monitoring the enlargement process in the form of regular periodical comparative reports (Enlargement/Agenda 2000 Watch). In parallel, researchers from the Institute contributed to a report commissioned by the World Bank "Winners and Losers of the EU Integration in the Central European Candidate Countries".

Poland's membership in the European Union enabled the Institute to get involved into European networks and to benefit from the European funding as well as from the 5th and 6th Framework Programmes ("ADAPT" Project, "EU- CONSENT" Project, Jean Monnet/ECSA Project, TEPSA network, EuroMeSCo network and LISOBOAN).

Around mid-September the Institute's website will be enriched by the Poland's Presidency Observer, presenting events, documents, bibliography, speeches and monthly summaries of Council works led by Polish Presidency.

3-8 July 2011

TEPSA and the University of Cologne co-organised an International Summer School and G20 Simulation Exercise at the Fondation Universitaire within the framework of THESEUS (Fritz-Thyssen Foundation) and MERCURY (FP7). Lectures covering the broad topic of multilateralism in general and the G20 in particular prepared the participants for the simulation of a two days G20 summit in Brussels. Several lecturers from TEPSA Board members and member institutes such as Iain Begg (LSE); Louise van Schaik (Clingendael Institute) and Jean-Victor Louis (former Secretary General of TEPSA) contributed to the Summer School. The combination of academic lectures and the practical experience of a simulation exercise proved very valuable. Please click here to download the draft report.

THESEUS Conference

THESEUS Conference on EU future perspective: external and internal challenges.

24-25 November 2011

The next THESEUS Conference will take place on 24 and 25 November 2011 in Cologne.

To foster dialogue between politics and academia in Europe, researchers and decision-makers from politics and society meet once a year in this forum for an intensive exchange of ideas. The conferences analyse the developments in European politics with special regard to external and internal challenges for Europe. This year the conference will discuss the EU future perspective given that Europe is facing a new world with increasing competition. Complex socio-political relations, both in international relations and inside the EU, together with not foreseeable consequences of the Euro crisis, could have a long-term influence on EU decisions, meaning that the EU needs to make necessary adjustments in line with the changing conditions in the world.

During the conference THESEUS rewards two researchers with the THESEUS Awards for Outstanding and Promising Research on European Integration: one senior award going to a researcher distinguished for his or her work on the dynamics of European integration and one junior award for an excellent researcher of the younger generation.

Please visit www.theseus-europe.net for further information about the project and its activities.

Summer school program

20 June - 2 July 2011

The IIA's and CSSS yearly summer school program came to an end in the beginning of July with another year of success. As we welcomed some familiar faces who have previously taught at the school, we also welcomed new professors who were teaching for the first time at the summer school program. We had a wide range of students, from all parts of Europe to USA and Africa. This year's focus was on "Small states and security", similar to last year. We might add that a new topic was introduced this year highlighting 'gender and security in small states' a very welcomed addition to the program.

A further addition was the lecture on small states in Africa. While "Small states in Europe" was as before the general topic, it was decided to go beyond the borders of Europe and shed light on small states in Africa, their problems, developments and security. It was a popular subject and a successful one at that and thus it was a strong addition to the summer school program.

We have already begun the preparations for the summer school 2012, which will focus on "Small states and globalisation".

The Europe Dialogues Seminar Series

August 2011-May 2012

The IIA recently received a Jean Monnet grant from the European Union in order to hold a series of lectures this coming academic year, continued from last year's "The Europe Dialogues Seminar Series". As summer is soon coming to an end, we have started our preparations for our annual seminar series and this year we will focus our attention on "A Dialogue on European Integration - Small States and the European Union". The lectures, 25 in all, will take place on Fridays at noon for the coming fall and winter and will continue throughout spring. We have some excellent academics, Icelandic and foreign who will discuss the European Union with a focus on small states. As Iceland has already begun its negotiations process for possible EU membership, the aim is to shed light on Iceland with its strong connection to Europe. These lectures are very informative and this is an excellent chance for Icelandic academics, government members and the general public to learn more about the EU, its policies, pros and cons and what Iceland can gain as well as being an influence within the EU. We have a wide range of topics that will be discussed this coming year, from EU treaties to fisheries and environmental policies, Nordic influence and Eastern partnership, roles of member states within the EU and to EU and Islam, to name just a few.

We already have confirmation from a few well known academics who have accepted our invitation, for example, Professor Simon Bulmer from the University of Sheffield, Professor Clive Archer from Manchester Metropolitan University, Professor Diana Panke from the University College Dublin, Annica Kronsell from Lund University and Gunilla Herolf from SIPRI. But starting this fall, we will host two lectures about Finland and its experience within the EU. The first lecture will be held on August 24th by Teija Tiilikainen from the Finnish Institute of International Affairs. She will discuss the possibilities and influences of small states within the EU, and the second lecture will take place on Tuesday the 13th of September when Antti Kuosmanen, ambassador of Finland at OECD will lecture on Finland's experience in the negotiations' and application process for EU membership. It is greatly appreciated we received such a generous grant from the Jean Monnet foundation. We are able to invite some excellent academics and hold our annual seminar series. This coming academic year will be an exciting year for EU discussions, thus we are very much looking forward to greeting the academics and hosting the lectures.

This paper deals with the question of the extent to which the EU's normative agenda is pursued and implemented in the case of Azerbaijan. The paper, which is based on interviews with EU officials working in Azerbaijan and local civil society actors, enables a greater insight into the questions of whether the implementation of the ENP in Azerbaijan matches its formulation, and how the ENP goals and their implementation resonate in the Azerbaijani civil society. 27th edition of the Barometer of the Elcano Royal Institute, The 27th edition of the BRIE -a survey carried out three times a year of a sample of 1,200 people considered a fair cross-section of the Spanish population- focuses on issues such as the situation in Greece and the attitude of the German government, Angela Merkel's popularity after the e.coli crisis, the support to the mission in Libya, the comparison between the 15-M movement and the Arab Spring, Osama Bin Laden's death, nuclear energy and soft power in Spain.

Gonzalo Escribano, The International Energy Agency Responds to the Libyan Crisis (ARI)

On 23 June, the International Energy Agency (IEA) announced the release of 60 million barrels of its members' strategic petroleum reserves in July. In justifying the move, the IEA cited the need to mitigate the effects of the Libyan crisis, but it has been interpreted as a call for the Organisation of the Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) to boost production and not jeopardise the economic recovery, as well as giving Saudi Arabia time to make the announced production increase materialise.

Studies for the European Parliament/Report:

Alexander Klimburg (oiiip) and Heli Tirmaa-Klar, Cybersecurity and Cyberpower: Concepts, Conditions and Capabilities for Action within the EU

The study analyses policy options for strengthening cybersecurity within the EU and examining potential points-of-entry, including within the Common Security and Defence Policy (CSDP). The study provides an overview of the principle concepts and definitions of cyber security and cyber war, drawing attention to the complexity and cross-jurisdictional nature of the field. In addition to examining current cyber threats to the EU, the study also analyses the capacity of the EU to address more sophisticated cyber-attacks within a common framework. In this respect the study offers important insights into the political, operational and structural challenges that need to be addressed in order to protect the EU and its citizens as well and to exercise “cyberpower” on the international stage. The study takes stock of the existing NATO and EU capabilities related to cyber security and highlights the added value of the EU in applying a diverse range of policies that can help enable it to comprehensively tackle the increasing range of cyber threats. The study has been requested to introduce Members of the European Parliament’s Sub-Committee on Security and Defence (SEDE) to the current issues in cyber security and cyber warfare, as well as to provide a selection of policy recommendations, including within the CSDP context. The study also provides innovative conceptual understanding on what might constitute EU “cyberpower”.

EU-Project/Study, Good Practices Manual for CIP Policies - Critical Infrastructure Protection (CIP) policies in Europe

Many nations are currently working on Critical Infrastructure Protection (CIP) programmes, often facing similar issues and challenges. The sharing of experiences, challenges and solutions would greatly benefit these initiatives. The project has the objective to integrate CIP knowledge and experiences by identifying good practices. These are aggregated and shared among all policymakers in Europe by means of a manual. This manual was developed by a consortium led by TNO, with project partners from government organisations in the Netherlands, Slovakia, Estonia, and oip.

The Direction General for Internal market published a Consultation on Modernising the Professional Qualifications Directive.

The Green Paper is aimed at gathering stakeholders' views on a modernisation of the Professional Qualifications Directive (Directive 2005/36/EC).

- new approaches to mobility
